Alexander Dumus. (Daily News, December 12th.) More than a week ago Alexander Dumas died; and it is only now that the world is made aware of the fact. So great has been the pressure of rapid and startling political events, that Dunis has been allowed to die in comparative obscurity. The rumour mentioned a few weeks ago in the Liberte that be was dying, was contained in a modest little paragraph which probably escaped the notice of many readers. Nor will the unfortunate sequel to that unexpected and unwelcome piece of nows Lia. -the unnouncement that the prolific dramatist and romancist died at Puys, near Dieppo, on the 5th instant -awaken the attention and remark which at any other time it would containly have received. Indeed, it is not until the fails, that purges out the foul matter from the present crisis is over, and the French action has recovered from the fierce fever of war, that Dumas' countrymen will have time to estimate the vulne of the man who, for forty years, has plied them with dramas, comedies, romanocs, bistories, travels, and sketches of every con- burning, stinging pains of Cancer, destroying ecivable kind. The young Dumas had 1,200 france a year; and, subsisting upon this modest sulary, seems to have applied bimself with much ussidnity to various and desultory reading. He began, as most young authors do, to write verses; and in 1826 he ventured to publish a volume, entitled "Nonvelles." of the fate of which we are left in darkness.
